THE LIFE AND PUBLIC SERVICES OF SAMUEL ADAMS.

BY W. WILLIAM V. WELLS.

BRINGING OF HIS ACTS AND PIKEONS AND HIS

AGENCY IN PRODUCING AND FORWARDING THE

AMERICAN REVOLUTION: WITH EXTRACTS

FROM HIS CORRESPONDENCE STATE

PAUL & CO., Publishers, 246 Park-row, New-York.

Evolve, 1865. Price, $2.50, postpaid.

LITTLE BROWN & CO.

"Without the character of Samuel Adams, the true history of the American Revolution can never be written. For forty years his name, his activity, were constantly exalted in his country, without fit reward."—John Adams in 1817.

"The controlling genius of the storm!"—Anthon's Gerry, 187.

"I can say he was truly a great man who in counsel, fortune, resources, homogeneous in his purposes, and had I think, a greater share than any other member in advising and directing our measures in the Northern war!"—Jederson in 1819.

"I cannot sufficiently respect his integrity and abilities. All good Americans should be anxious to have him in their hearts."—George Custer in 1873.

"The Father of America"—Stephen Sayre, London, 1771.

"If there was any Paladins to the Revolution, Samuel Adams was the one."—J. Horner in 1825.

"He was a man of commanding and tried after independence."—Daniel Webster.

"Such is the chagrin and inflexible disposition of the man, that he can never be conciliated by any office or gift whatever."—Gov. Hutchinson's Secret Letters to the King.

"It was this man who, by his superior application, managed the actions in Congress at Philadelphia, and the meetings in New England."—Galway's History against Sam'l Adams.

"Sam'l Adams was the last of the Puritans. . . . More than most of his associates he understood the efficacy of personal intercourse with the people. It was Samuel Adams, more than any other man, who brought the question home to the hearts and firesides of the nation."

The throne of his ascendancy was in Faneuil-hall. As each new measure of arbitrary power was announced from across the Atlantic, or each new act of meanness and violence on the part of the officers of the Government and of the army occurred in Boston, news, often in the most minute detail, was hastened to port, and sent to Adams in Faneuil-hall. There, as from the crowded gallery of moderation's chair, he analyzed, enlightened, and roused the admiring throng, he seemed to gather them together beneath the gable of his indomitable spirit. He was a man who, in his own words, "had wings."—Ed. Webster, Lowell, December 1, 1859.

"He was the first man who asserted the independence of the Colonies upon the supreme authority of the King."—Gov. Hutchinson's reply to the questions of George III., concerning Samuel Adams.
